2011

On Sunday the 26th of June, I went to see Glee live at the O2 Arena in London.

I think the way the stages were set out worked because there were two stages, and during a song, the performer started on the smaller stage and walked up to the bigger stage and everyone in the ground seating area could see him. (Unfortunately I wasn't in the ground seating area and couldn't see him!) I also enjoyed a performance by Artie (Kevin McHale) because although his character is disabled, he danced whilst singing and he was a really good dancer.

Although Artie was a really good dancer, he couldn't sing and dance at the same time and he came out of tune a few times and I thought that didn't work very well.

I really enjoyed the show because instead of the cast singing different songs, the show had a story line to it, which was the club talking about (and performing) the different types of songs they had learned about in glee.

The thing I loved the most was when Britney sang Slave 4 u by Britney Spears because she did a really complicated dance and sang at the same time and stayed in tune.

The O2 arena was giant and round, everyone had a clear view of the stage and there were screens either side of the stage so people who sat further away from the stage had a good view of the performance, although I had a seat really high up and the upstairs seating was really steep and it was quite scary at first!
